FEBRUARY 2010

How to get the right information

With the coming back of our seasonal neighbors, graciously identified in the Valley as “Winter Texans” some confusion has popped up among them regarding our TV schedule information. Most viewers get our digital signal (DT 38) over the air, some have cable (Channel 10), still some viewers resort to digital providers such as DirecTV and Dish Network. With the advent of digital TV and multicasting possibilities, the amount of schedules regarding the wide diversity of TV channels just multiplied. No printed media got it easy.

Getting the right information takes some work and a central source, which up to the last year it was a company under the name of Tribune, with which we also had a permanent delivery of information. Tribune was the place to go for everybody who wanted to provide information on TV schedules all over the country. Printed media, cable outlets, satellite providers, used to get their schedule grids from Tribune. The accuracy was pretty much close to a 100%.

But Tribune vanished last year, leaving behind it a jungle of TV schedule outlets and a great cry for some order.

Big networks have invested extra resources to fill the gap.

KMBH has continued to send its schedule on a monthly basis (updated as needed on a daily basis) to PBS, which has a very reliable online scheduling web site for all of the affiliate stations, KMBH included. KMBH has its own web site with the last minute updates:

www.kmbh.org

Some viewers call us to request that we send our scheduling information to the newspapers which we are more than willing to do if at least we had the openness of the newspapers to make a place for KMBH-DT 38 in their schedule grid.

Some newspapers are still listing Channel 60 which used to be our analog designation until February 17, 2009 when we shifted to become an only-digital channel.

Cable and satellite providers are serving locally but do not have local scheduling offices. Everything is managed from their headquarters which are not in the Rio Grande Valley.

For viewers with Internet access (most of those who have complained have done it through e-mail, meaning they have the Internet commodity handy) we recommend to just go directly to our home page. You can download our monthly program guide, which you are reading right now.

If you still want to have our scheduling information printed on the papers, the best thing you can do is to write directly to your newspaper with this request.

As I said before, we will certainly provide the papers with the most accurate information on our schedule as per their request.

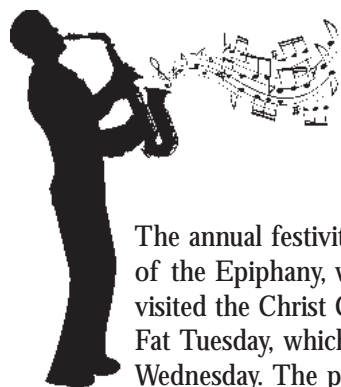

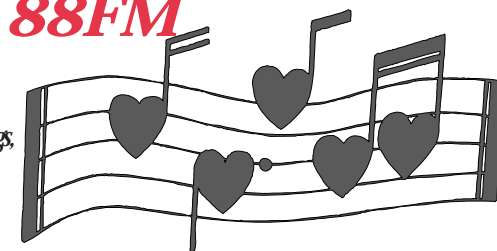

Thank you for watching PBS and much more on KMBH-DT 38!

HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY!

"When I get older losing my hair many years from now, Will you still be sending me a Valentine, birthday greetings, bottle of wine? If I'd been out till quarter to three would you lock the door? Will you still need me, will you still feed me, When I'm sixty-four?"-John Lennon

What is Fat Tuesday?

Fat Tuesday is Mardi Gras, the festival New Orleans, Louisiana, is famous for. "Gras" is French for fat and "Mardi" is French for Tuesday.

The annual festivities start on January 6, the Twelfth Night Feast of the Epiphany, when the three kings are supposed to have visited the Christ Child, and build to a climax on Mardi Gras, or Fat Tuesday, which always occurs on the day before Ash Wednesday. The parties and parades will continue until Lent begins at the stroke of midnight on Tuesday.

Public Radio 88FM will feature an audio celebration with two hours of "New Orleans - All The Way Live" Tuesday February 16th from 3pm-5pm and again at 7pm

VALLEY COMMUNITY & CULTURE

Ready To Learn

TV & Movies: Grade Schoolers

from pbs.org/parents

At the age of six or seven, children begin to understand that people hold differing views. Around eight or nine, they start to discover that people have “inner lives”—that is, a person may think one thing but do another. Both of these developments make it possible for your child to begin thinking about television and other forms of storytelling in new ways.

Instead of zoning out in front of the set, your child can become an active viewer. How? By learning to ask questions about what he is seeing and hearing. Even if you don't know all the answers, wonder out loud with your child about the shows you watch together. This will let him know that TV shows don't have to be any one way. Instead, each show is the product of many decisions that people made along the way.

8 Ways to Make Your Child an Active Viewer

1. Ask your child questions about what he sees and hears on TV.

Take advantage of the control you have with a VCR. Or use commercial breaks to ask “why” and “how” questions rather than yes-or-no questions: I wonder why the writer had the actor say that? Did you notice that the scary music started to play just then?

2. Talk to your child about why he likes certain characters.

Your child may be looking for role models. You won't know why he finds certain characters appealing until you talk to him about what he thinks of as courageous, admirable or smart: Who do we know that does that? Is that character truly admirable or does he just look cool?

3. Inspire your child to create images of her own.

Remind your child that all images—on TV, websites or the side of a bus—are created by people. Then close the circle by pointing out that she can create pictures, too. Get her to take photographs, paint, draw or doodle—anything that spurs her to tell stories with images from her imagination. Keep pencils, crayons and other art materials near a table so she can express ideas that occur to her while watching TV. This is the first step in helping your grade schooler discover the value of the visual arts firsthand.

4. Let your child peek behind the scenes of movies or TV.

Your grade schooler may not realize how directors use camera angles, digital animation, stunt doubles, miniature models, make-up, costumes and other tools to create a fictional story. Talk together about these elements. Wonder aloud how various programs were made.

5. Help your child create “fall-back” activities including physical ones.

Rather than flipping on the set at random, teach your child to select programs in advance. (Try to do the same yourself!) Help your child start some long-term projects—a collection, a puzzle, a scrapbook—that he can return to when bored. If the project requires a table or a special shelf to store materials, set aside space you won't need to disrupt.

6. Attune your child to the sound of TV.

Ask your grade schooler questions such as these: What music is used and when? How do the voices of different characters sound? How is silence used? (Possible answers include to build suspense, to show that someone is deaf; to change the mood.)

7. Make a game of “close viewing.”

See how many voices or accents, how many types of clothing or how many places you and your child can identify. This can be a good way to start a conversation about stereotypes; who is portrayed on TV? Who is missing?

8. Avoid programs in which characters use violence to solve problems.

When a character hits, kicks or bites his way out of a problem, point it out to your child. Ask him to come up with another way to solve the issue, such as negotiation or discussion. Explain that violence has very real consequences, but cartoons rarely show these.
